to glow with feminine serenity. But when her husband spontaneously decides they should cast off Gramercy Park for Marigold Village retirement home as a "preemptive strike against his decrepitude," Pippa finds her beatific persona unraveling in alarming ways: the truth is that the gracious woman of the present day has seen more than her fair share of the wild side. By seventeen, Pippa had lived with a Dexedrine-addicted mother, felt the first stirrings of sexuality with a school girlfriend, had an affair with a teacher, and run away from home, set adrift on a course littered with broken hearts—until she seemingly found love

In The Christmas

Experiences of Women.

Here, in a letter of her own, Lee Smith explains how she was inspired to write this celebrated epistolary

novel: Dear Friends,

Like me, you probably get Christmas letters every year. I read every word and save every letter. Because every Christmas letter is the story of a life, and what story can be more interesting than the story of our lives? Often, it is the story of an entire family. But you also have to read between the lines with Christmas letters. Sometimes, what is not said is even more important than what is on the page. In The Christmas Letters, I have used this familiar format to illumine the

The Private

lives, hopes, dreams, and disappointments of three generations of American women.

Much of the story of The Christmas Letters is also told through shared recipes. As Mary, my favorite character, says,
"I feel as if I have written out my life story in recipes! The Cool and fondue period, then the quiche and crepes phase, and now it's these salsa years." I wrote this little book for the same reason I write to my friends and relatives

every holiday--Christmas
letters give us a chance to remember and celebrate who we are.
With warmest greetings,
Lee Smith
